

Millennials are focused on a career for me, paving their own path and developing the skills to ensure employment security. Managing others is low on their list; money and purpose matter much more. It is time to rethink people practices to attract, retain and develop the next generation of leaders.

BEING THE BOSS IS A LOW PRIORITY

MEN ASPIRE TO LEAD MORE THAN WOMEN

Нот	w much more a
		0% - 3%
7% - 10% China - 7% Canada - 7% JK - 7%	Italy - 5% Spain - 6% Norway - 6%	France - 0% India - 1% Brazil - 3%
eece - 8% itzerland - 9%	Germany - 6% Australia - 6%	Japan - 3% Mexico - 3%
ngapore - 9% 5A - 10%	Netherlands - 6%
Some countries ar gap is more signifi	re close to parity, whi icant.	le in others the

MY SKILLS, MY CAREER

Millennials are focused on developing their individual skills, rather than learning to manage and lead others.

Managerial Individual Skills 75%

Skills

25%

Managerial Skills

-

- Leadership: 16%
- People management: 9%

Individual Skills

- Technical job skills: 27%
- Personal skills / Teamwork / Communication: 25%
- IT/Technology: 23%

PLEASED, BUT NOT SATISFIED...

Two-thirds of Millennials are pleased with how they are being managed... however, most Millennials rank their own people management style more positively than their managers'.

I'm good at	My manager is good at
72%	Listening	50%
64%	Offering feedback	34%
62%	Giving encouragement	39%

WHAT HIRING MANAGERS SAY...

Where Millennials Get it RIGHT

• Learning new skills is key to advancement

Attracting, Retaining and Developing Millennial Workers

